One of Cairo's biggest and most striking mosques and madrassas, the Sultan Hassan Mosque-Madrassa, was constructed during the Mamluk era when Muslims governed Egypt in the Middle Ages. An-Nasir Hasan, a lesser-known sultan, commissioned the mosque, which is renowned for its enormous size and futuristic architectural characteristics.

The Sultan Hassan Mosque-Madrassa was one of Cairo's most striking mosques when it was constructed. It had very distinctive, huge dimensions and state-of-the-art architectural characteristics. The eminent historian

Al-Maqrizi even asserted that the mosque was one of the many "wonders of construction" and that the unimpressive and transient monarch, Nasir Hasan, had ordered it built.
